With a background in civil litigation, Erin works with health care providers to secure vital public benefits for their residents, and represents providers in related guardianship, probate, and collection proceedings. She is passionate about ensuring that providers have a payor-source so they can focus on caring for their residents. She has advocated for clients at numerous administrative and civil hearings and has appeared before state courts at the trial level. Erin strives to provide high quality, efficient, and cost effective representation to each of her clients.

A former DC resident, Erin now resides with her husband and daughter in Illinois.
